An investigation revealed the fact that the girl had made an attempt to drown herself, but had failed. She left the house some time dur ing the night, but was not missed until this morning, when her sister, with whom she sleeps, noticed that she was not in bed. She supposed that Ida had arisen and gone Shortly after a note was found on the floor, stating that they would find her the house. They immediately started to look for her in the creek. Shortly after had been in the water and was thoroughly soaked, but it was too shallow to do the work. She was removed to the house, and at last accounts was much better. There is no reason that can be given for the act, as she was cheerful, and her relations the most pleasant. She must ortainly have been laboring under temporary insan-ity.
